Wool Was Not Her Specialty

A colored lawyer retained on behalf of a colored dressmaker, charged with stealing her customer's silk and substituting an inferior quality, was trying to throw doubt upon the testimony of a lady witness who had said that she could tell the value of silk accurately.

"Do you think," said he, "you could recognize the man of color who brought you the bundle?"

"No," she answered. "I think all colored persons look alike."

"Oh, do you?" said the lawyer. "We will see," and he called upon several negroes present to rise.

"Now, madam, please tell the court whether you could distinguish these men apart?"

"I don't see any difference between them, and, except that some are a little darker than others, I cannot distinguish one from another."

"Do you mean then, madam, that you can judge accurately of silk, and yet you cannot see any difference between Mr. Johnson and anyone?"

"She regarded herself as a judge of silk and not of wool," interrupted the prosecuting attorney.—New York Mail.

Said Mr. Bullion to his intended son-in-law:

"Have you fixed up the date for the wedding yet, young man?"

"That," replied the tactful young man, "I shall leave entirely to Mary."

"And what kind of a girl is she? Is it going to be? Do you want it done in style, or would you prefer it to be a quiet show?"

The young man considered for a moment. Then he said:

"I think, sir, I should leave that entirely to Mrs. Bullion."

"Um! And what is the amount of your income?"

"Oh, that, sir," answered the pleasant young fellow, "I leave that entirely to you, Mr. Bullion."

Two of a Class

His name was Johnny, and his ambition was to be grown up. He had watched Clay and Percy, but that's another story, as, like Kipling, says:

"Papa," he piped, as he walked with his dad on the beach at Tiddletop-on-the-Tide, "what's under those rocks?"

"Limpets," snapped papa. This was not the first question.

"Wouldn't they rather walk about, pa?"

"No!" rapped out papa. "They prefer to cling where they are."

"Is everything that likes clinging to something else a limpet, pa?"

"For goodness' sake—Yes!" roared father.

Johnny thought:

"Well, pa," he concluded, "is Percy a limpet, pa, when he says goodbye to Clay in the passage?"

Resolute on the Farm—Every farmer and stock-raiser should keep a supply of Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil on hand, not only as a ready remedy for all the ailments of his family, but because it is a horse and cattle medicine of the highest order. As a substitute for sweet oil for horses and cattle affected by colds it far surpasses anything that can be administered.

Walk toward a big mirror, and then to you will remark that you have become awkward walk that you imagined.

Be Warned by Headache

It Tells of Serious Derangements of the Liver and Kidneys

DR. CHASE'S KIDNEY-LIVER PILLS

You are warned by the warning of a headache, which is not generally

A headache almost always warns you of derangements of the digestive system, the liver, kidneys or bowels.

Awaken the liver to healthful action by the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, and you not only free yourself of headache, but remove the cause, which will soon lead to more dangerous results than headache.

Invigorate the action of the kidneys by this treatment and you take away the dangers of Bright's disease as well as free yourself of headache.

Pains are the result of poison in the system and whether you have headache, backache or aching limbs, you can be almost sure of relief and cure when you cleanse and regulate the vital organs by the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

They are wonderfully prompt, as well as definite and thorough in action. You can depend upon them, no matter how long-standing or complicated your case, so long as the cause is the sluggish, torpid condition of the liver and kidneys.

If you don't feel like risking 25 cents for a box, write for a free sample. A trial will convince you of their merits. One pill a dose; 25 cents a box; all dealers or Edmanston, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

"I suppose you hate to see your daughter marry," said the young man.

"Yes, I do," admitted the father. "Her mother has made it a point to be mighty sweet tempered while this courtship was going on."—Washington Herald.

Minard's Liniment Cures Dandruff

He was a commercial traveller of the most flashy type and had just finished telling a startling story of his newly made acquaintance of the railway carriage.

"That reminds me of one of the Muncheusen's yarns," remarked the victim, for want of something better to say.

"Muncheusen! Who is he?"

"Why, don't you know about him? He is the most colossal example of mendacity that civilization has produced."

A brief, painful silence ensued, which was broken by the traveller in a tone that was almost timid.

"Excuse me," he said, "I seem inquisitive, but would you mind telling me what house he travels for?"—Pittsburgh Leader.

Alcohol applied to the face with a soft cloth will remove all grime and oil and at the same time benefit the skin. Cold cream is also excellent and should be used in place of alcohol if the skin is very dry.

A. C. HATHAWAY,

EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR

CROSSFIELD, ALTA., SEPT. 7, 1911

Liberal Meeting At Floral

A meeting was held at Floral School House on last Thursday evening in the interests of the reciprocity candidate, L. S. G. Van Wart, at which the Messrs. Dr. C. J. Stewart, C. B. Reilly and E. H. Morrow addressed the electors of that district on the subject that is now before them.

Mr. J. Cavender occupied the Chair and in a few well chosen words expressed his pleasure in introducing the speakers of the evening, and called upon Mr. Morrow as the first speaker.

Mr. Morrow went into the proposed pact from a general stand point, discussing clause after clause that in his opinion and the opinion of his party were to the advantage of the general public of Canada.

Mr. C. B. Reilly was then introduced by the Chairman, and as his predecessor dealt with the proposed pact from a general view point.

At this juncture the Chairman asked some gentlemen from the audience to come forward and express an opinion upon the subject in hand, and Mr. Jas. Laut, a prominent farmer of the district rose and gave his reason for supporting the government in this matter, saying that it was his firm belief that if it were not for the farmers having asked the government at Ottawa for an improvement in trade conditions in Canada, the reciprocity pact would not now be before the people of Canada. Mr. Laut also urged upon the farmers present to associate themselves with the Farmers Union, as he firmly believed that this was the only way in which the farmers would ever be able to hold their own.

Mr. Stafford Sr. another respected and well to do farmer of the district was then called upon to explain the conditions as they exist between Washington and British Columbia, and he quoted prices on oats and hay in that country and told of the advantage Alberta Farmers have in competing with their neighbors to the south-west, and ended his short address by saying "Let us have Reciprocity."

Dr. Stewart was then called to the platform, and expressed his pleasure at again being able to address his old friends in this district, and then launched forth in an eloquent speech in favor of reciprocity with the United States, placing argument after argument before the farmers explaining the advantages which they would receive if Reciprocity became law.

A stanza of "God Save the King" closed this very successful meeting.

CHAPTER XXVI.

In the ordinary course of things, and, but for the dramatic events of the evening, it would have been about the time of night when dinner was finished and the house-party had gathered in the drawing-room. It had been somewhere about seven when the Americans reached Merton Grange, and now it was getting to be nine. It was in the exact temperature at which one enjoys an evening stroll, but the recent excitement had been so exciting that Vera felt how impossible it would be to exert her mind to anything within the limits of the house. There was a moon, too, which made all the difference in the world. As she went, she felt she almost smiled to herself to think how strange her conduct might look in the eyes of those foreign people whose lives run in conventional channels. She told herself more than once that it would be absurd to hope to see Gerald at this time of night, but all the same she continued her journey across the country.

She had not so far to go as she expected, for presently she could see the glow of a city in the distance, and Verner came up. A little joyful cry came from Vera.

"This is very fortunate," she said. "How lucky it is that I should run against you in this fashion." "Well, I was thinking myself that you came on purpose," Verner said, and, after all, it was not so very lucky, seeing that he had been hanging about this house on the chance of seeing you since he became a convict. But you look rather more disturbed and anxious than usual. My dearest girl, I do hope you have been having no new complications. I shall really have to take you by force and carry you out of the country. Why should we have to go on living this miserable kind of existence when we can go to the States and be happy and enjoy life? Now, don't tell me that something fresh has occurred, which has kept me here."

"By the way, have you had any visitors tonight?" "What do you mean about them?" Vera asked. "Have you found out anything from Mr. Fenwick?" "Well, I should say," Verner said, drily, "I have absolutely got to the bottom of that mysterious coin business. I was with them when Egan and Grady to London, and I was with them when they arrested that awful creature, Florence. Egan and Grady are old friends of mine, and I told them that I had seen the coins and how you literally burnt your fingers over them. They were coming down here to see me, and I offered to accompany them; but they declined my offer, so I returned here alone, and I was then hanging about the house, curious to know what had taken place. Have they bargued our friend Fenwick yet?"

"It is about Mr. Fenwick that I wish to speak to you," Vera replied, and she looked at him with a steady way, I don't know whether you are aware of the fact that he is the son of Lord Merton."

"Perhaps you had better tell me the story," Verner said.

"I am coming to that presently. Mr. Evers is down here; he is the man who is engaged to my sister Beth."

Verner whistled softly to himself. At any rate, he knew all about that, for his mind went swiftly back to the series of dramatic events which had taken place some time previously in the house in Fortmouth Square.

He recollected now the white-faced young man who had broken away from his captors and joined Le Fenwick, otherwise Bates, in the drawing-room. He recollected the joy and delight of the girls, how she had clung to the stranger as if he had come back to her from the other side of the grave.

"There will be a great many things to be explained to you presently," he said, gravely. "But for the present, I want to know all about Fenwick. Where is he now?"

"He is hiding up at the house. I believe they have put him into a secret room, the whereabouts of which is known only to Charles Evers. Of course, he will not stay."

"But why should he be blackballed at all?" Verner asked. "Surely, after all the trouble he has caused you—" "You must not forget that he is of our own flesh and blood," Vera said, quietly. "I had almost ignored the fact—an afraid I should have ignored it altogether had not my brother taken a strong view of the matter. At any rate, there he is, and we are in a conspiracy to get him safely out of the country. For the present the man is utterly broken down and absolutely incapable of taking care of himself. I want you to do me a favor, Gerald. I want you to take a hand in this business. While the police are still upon the track it would not be prudent for Mr.

Evers or my brother to be too much in evidence just now."

"My dearest girl, I would do anything in the world for you," Verner said. "And if I am to take that and get rid of him altogether, I will do so with pleasure and never count the cost. If I could see your brother—"

"Then why can't you come and see him now?" Vera said. "You will have to meet sooner or later, and there could be no better opportunity for an explanation."

To Le Fenwick and Evers, smoking in the dining-room came Vera and Verner. Le Fenwick looked up with a sort of mild surprise and perhaps just a suspicion of mistrust in his eyes. "When have we here, Verner?" he said. "You know him perfectly well by name—he was with us, on and off, for a considerable time before our father died. Father had a great regard for him, and I hope you will have the same, for a reason which I am just going to mention."

"I am sure I am very pleased to meet you," Le Fenwick said, politely. "This is my friend, Mr. Charles Evers, the only son of the late Lord Merton. When I come to look at you, Mr. Verner, I confess that your looks please me, but I have not had to deal with so many suspicious characters lately that really—"

"Oh, don't apologise," Verner laughed. "You will have to make the best of me. I came here tonight with Vera to have a thorough explanation of certain matters."

"Oh, indeed," Le Fenwick responded with uplifted brows. "My sister and you appear to be of very familiar terms."

"It is only natural," Vera laughed. A vivid blush flooded her face.

Charles, Mr. Verner is my husband."

"I am not in the least surprised to hear it," Le Fenwick said. "In fact, I am not surprised at anything. I have quite outgrown all emotions of that kind. Perhaps you will be good enough to let me know this chance about, and why I have not heard of her before. As your brother, I am entitled to know."

"Of course, you are. It was just about a year since that I came to my self to Gerald. I had my own ideas why the marriage should be kept secret. You see, I had never less than in my lot with my uncle, Mark Fenwick, because I had determined to get to the bottom of the business of our father's death. I felt certain that Charles here had nothing to do with it, though, owing to his feeble and weakness, he played directly into the hands of the man who was really responsible for the crime."

"We all know who is responsible for the crime," Le Fenwick said. "There is no necessity to mention that to me."

"Oh, I know that," Vera went on. "The explanation I am making now is more to my husband than to you. He has been good and honest and kind, and he is entitled to know everything. I was within a few minutes of my being married to him, and I heard something of a great deal of truth. I learnt that Fenwick had conspired to throw the blame of the tragedy on my sister Evers. I learnt that an effect this conspiracy had on our poor Beth. There and not a great deal more. I wrote to my husband and told him in all probability I could never see him again. You see, I had never seen him for a long space of time. I implored him to trust me in spite of all appearances, and he did so. Now he knows the reason why I acted so strangely. I can see that he was a thousand questions, but I hope that he will refrain from doing so at present. The thing that troubles me now is what his father, Le Fenwick, she is all right enough."

"I am sure," Le Fenwick said. "I came down. I have left her in the safe hands of the very clever doctor who has my case in his charge, and Beth is with his family. We can leave her down here tomorrow if you like."

"Nothing would please me better," Vera said, fervently. "And now, I want to know if you have done any thing or formed any plan for getting rid of Mark Fenwick. I shall not be able to breathe here until he is gone."

Le Fenwick explained that they had come to no conclusion at present. He was quite alive to the fact that delay was dangerous, seeing that Lord Merton's agents would have to communicate with him by telegram, and that the owner of the house might be back any moment. Therefore it was absolutely necessary that some thing should be done in the matter time."

Mark Fenwick, without loss of time, Vera indicated her companion time. "That is why I brought Gerald here," she said. "I thought he might be able to help us. He knows all sorts and conditions of people, and it is probable that he may be able to find an asylum in London where the wretched man upstairs can hide until it is quite safe to get him out of the way."

"I think I can manage that part of the programme," Verner said. "There is an old servant of mine, living down Poplar way with his wife who has been doing a little business in the world, and he is exceedingly steady in every way. I should like to take a lodger to-oblige me, and when you come to think of it, Poplar is not all a bad place for anybody who wants to get out of the country without being observed. It is close to the river, and all sorts of craft are constantly going up and down. What do you think of the idea?"

COINS UNDER WEIGHT.

In England it's the Duty of Those Who Get Them to Great Trouble.

It is the duty of each and every British subject not merely to refuse gold coins that is under a certain weight, but to break it.

"Every person," the act reads, "shall, by himself or others, cut, break or deface such coin tendered to him in payment of goods to a retail shopkeeper. The latter put the coin in a testing machine and, as it broke in two refused to take it."

The coin, however, was pronounced by experts to be perfectly genuine, and when the case was taken into a court of law the shopkeeper was ordered to refund 10 shillings to the customer.

Money, both gold and silver, wears out at a surprising rate. It is reckoned that there is actually £100,000,000 in gold coin in England, a very large proportion of which is locked in the strong rooms of banks. Yet of that which is in active circulation the wastage is so great that during every twelve months thirty-two million of gold and silver is rubbed off into the dust—Pearson's Weekly.

PUNCTUATION.

The Modern System Was Introduced by Aldus Manutius.

Punctuation is merely of stops or points, so as to indicate the division of sentences and assist the reader to a proper enunciation, is a learned origin may be ascertained, an Aldus Manutius, a grammarian, who lived in the thirteenth century B. C. Whatever his system may have been, it was subsequently lost, and it was not until the sixteenth century that it was reintroduced by Charlemaigne, the various stops and symbols being designed by Warrington and Aldus.

The present system of punctuation was introduced in the latter part of the fifteenth century by Aldus Manutius, a Venetian printer, who was responsible for our modern system. Strict School Rules.

John Wesley said that school children should be so well disciplined that when they were released from school they should be able to do without the aid of any system of punctuation. We find in many early manuscripts that the letters are placed at equal distances apart, with no connecting line between them in the matter of spacing, an arrangement which must have rendered reading at first somewhat difficult.

A Faith Cure.

Dr. Joseph Oudinot relates a story of the student days at St. Bartholomew's hospital. A man came to him with an injury to his hand. The doctor did not know what the ailment was, but he prescribed an ointment which was practically inert. The man returned to the hospital the following week.

"Ah, sir," he said, "I want to recognize why it is that St. Bartholomew's hospital has such a great reputation. I came from Leicester and had been told all the doctors in Leicester. Your ointment has done me more good in one week than all the ointment of the doctors of Leicester in many months."

"That result," added the doctor, "was owing to the fact that the man came to me on a firm belief that he could be cured there—London Graphic."

MISS GRANNIS' DECISION.

It Came With the Winning of the Game.

By A. M. DAVIES OGDEN.

It is so fatally easy for a misander- standing to arise.

Johnson, galloping swiftly through the long lane of overreaching green, was musing somewhat bitterly upon this fact. It was over a month now since he had seen Helen Granis, a month which had done a great deal toward quickening a spark hitherto not entirely recognized into a vivid flame. He had tried to see her, but unsuccessfully, and now his thoughts were brooding, as so often before, over that unfortunate meeting. Was he to blame or shy? Yet how could the fault be his?

Once again he went back mentally to the beginning—that night when he had telegraphed to ask if she would ride. They had often spoken of so doing, and this had been his first opportunity. The answer had been that she would be at the club at 4 o'clock. Johnson, promptly then, entered over from the stable at 4 precisely. He waited. He waited. He waited half after 4; he waited until a quarter of 5. There was no sign of Miss Granis. At last, reluctantly, he rode to the park, wondering what had happened. The first person he met, walking her horse slowly down the main drive in the direction of the gate, was the girl herself, and with her, talking eagerly, was Randal Sinclair, the man of all others whom Johnson most detested.

For a moment Johnson had stared, rather incredulous, unable to trust his eyes.

Then, with a formal lifting of his hat, he was past, the dark red mount leaping to his chest and eye in his soul. Had she forgotten the engagement, or had she deliberately thrown him over for Sinclair—Sinclair with his millions, who could give her everything?

In the sudden darkness revealed by the flash of jealousy Johnson realized for the first time how much this slender, little girl of staidness, meant to him.

He had hardly gone a mile before the impulse which had made him bid her pass on looked the height of ridiculousness. Of course there was some mistake. Why had he not stopped and asked? But, although he turned at once, it was too late—the two had vanished.

He had telephoned that night. Miss Granis was out for dinner. He had called the next afternoon. Miss Granis was not at home. He could not go for there was no answer. One could not ask a lady why she had chosen to ride with another. The week after, when he tried calling once more, the same was the case. He found that the family had departed for their country place.

Johnson was in despair, but it was not entirely a bad thing for him; it taught him a lot.

As he turned in now at the Newlands place and dropped off his horse some one moving down by the tennis court suddenly brought his heart into his mouth. Could it be she? He knew that Miss Granis and Ida Newlands were good friends. Was it possible she might be staying here for a week?

With tingling pulses he went forward. It was—it was! And he might never have known! Somehow he managed to answer properly the greetings of Ida and the men grouped about; then he tapped to Miss Granis. He was unreasonably enough to be disappointed when the girl gave him merely a conventional smile. He felt that he was the one with the right to be angry. Ida Newlands looked sharp and then both Miss Granis and Ida Granis went on to divine that something had occurred.

Now, as she saw Johnson after a moment turn aside her horse with her to a sudden glance at the truth. And as she caught Johnson's flush as Sinclair came across the lawn her courtesy deepened. But what could be done? In this last month Sinclair had not given his advantage hard. She knew that Helen was waiting. He did not fancy Sinclair. It was her brother who had asked him today. And she did like Johnson. With a swift inspiration she jumped to her feet.

"Let's have some tennis!" she exclaimed. "Helen, I will challenge you to play with me. I will try to beat Mr. Sinclair and myself. Here your racket," pretending not to see the girl's reluctance. It was the only way she could think of to bring them together. Johnson could put up a strong game. He was tall, with long legs and arms that seemed to cover every corner of the court. And Helen had a clean telling stroke. Sinclair, however, was no mean adversary. They would have to play up. Mr. Johnson was not thinking of tennis. This was his chance. He must make the most of it before he joined that clustering group. As he crossed the lawn to Miss Granis, for her service he looked down at her for a moment.

"Why did you not come to the club that day?" he asked abruptly. "I waited and waited—"

"Ready?" interrupted Sinclair, as Helen flashed a ball over the net. Johnson's heart beginning to beat fast, tightened his grip on his racket. There had been surprise, unmistakable surprise, in Helen's eyes.

"Did you not expect me to meet you at the club?" he demanded as they changed courts.

"You lost that point," was the impatient response. "No, of course not. I always mount at the park entrance."

"But the maid said—" persisted Johnson.

"Then the maid was mistaken. Ah, be careful," he was nearly missed a returned ball.

A strange desire not to be beaten did suddenly spring to his mind. He meant. They must win this set, he and Johnson. They must not be beaten by Sinclair. She looked across the net at his red, rather heavy face. Could she marry him? Her family had hoped for it. He was a splendid match, of course, and yet—what did Harry Johnson mean by asking why she had not come to the club? She told the maid to say that she would be at the park every day and then to telephone the club for her horse.

"Waited there an hour," said Johnson. "And then to meet you coming out of the park—with another maid. What could I think?"

"Ah!" said the girl with a quick indrawn breath. Couldn't he have known that she was only walking her horse up the drive while she waited? The meeting with Sinclair had been pure chance. She, too, had waited, growing more annoyed with the awkward position in which she found herself, annoyed also by Sinclair's veiled remarks upon Johnson's tardiness, his polite wonder, and then to let Johnson appear, raise his hat and pass out. The girl bit her lip again at the memory.

Then suddenly as she caught the look in his eager, earnest eyes her own not faded. After all, he had a bad time, too, and all through that stupid match, his little messages, confused with his nervous gesture she turned.

"Do play!" she exclaimed. "We must go."

Sinclair, rather sick at being forced to play on a hot afternoon, had hitherto not chosen to exert himself, letting the game go to his adversaries, but now he was beginning to be interested. If they were to win Johnson must concentrate. And Johnson, all at once infected by something in the girl's manner, straightened himself. The other side should not win a single game. He drew his four strokes, fully aware of an unwelcome tension in his arm, strove his utmost, unavailingly. Johnson's mouth shut hard, played his strokes, muscled with sin and sweat. Five! Helen was breathless, her lips parted. Love six! Set!

With a great sigh Johnson faced her. "We've won!" he whispered exultantly. Just loud enough for her to hear. Helen, her eyes unfathomable, glanced for a moment across at Sinclair.

"Yes," she said softly; "a love match."

The Point of the Story. A mother was greatly worried by her small daughter's habit of running away. Thinking to impress the child with the danger of getting lost, she told her a vivid story of some children who ran away to go hunting. Night found them far from home and lost in the woods. With much art the mother told of a storm in the night and of the terrible distress of the parents and friends who hunted for the children until morning. She also told about the good breakfast prepared for the children, which they missed because they did not reach home till 10 o'clock. The little girl listened intently to every word, and the mother hoped that the story was making an impression. When she finished the child was silent for a few moments, as if expecting something more. Then she asked eagerly: "Did they get any nuts?"

A Quaker Charm.

In many parts of Norway the chances of marriage or old maidhood make the girls use a strange love charm in order to know their fate. A maiden who desires this wears a net of the finest hair, working ten miles on a moonlight night, and she believes that if she does this successfully for thirty moonlight nights she will be married, within three days. But woe to the girl who breaks the hair she weaves with or tears holes in the net—she is doomed to be an old maid.

marked, and those who like to sit out to watch the moon rise from the front through dew wet lanes need be only wrapped up. This model, with its ample length, is admirable for a day spent on the water or a late drive. There are often cool wet days when a sweater is as necessary as a ducking. The velvet collar and cuffs and the velvet band upon the pockets are particularly fetching and up to date touches.

tractive appearance. Mission furniture, as it is called, is a craft which is being built so substantially that they cannot easily be transferred from place to place by the average woman, and even on the summer porch there are hours when the service of a man are not available. Pure furniture of this nature is very nice, but the yellow furniture has its disadvantages. The colored specimens are apt to fade, and some of it warps with the weather.

Baked Custard.

When making baked custard it is often puzzling to know when it is ready, for if boiled too long it will curdle and spoil. Take out the spoon after stirring it round and round, and if the custard turns back instead of going the way you have been stirring it is quite ready and should be taken off the fire immediately.

BEST MEN ARE KILLED.

Dr. J. A. Macdonald Tells Plain Facts About War.

"The great twilight zone of modern civilization is the international area, and there should be such a meeting of national minds as would make lawlessness between two nations as difficult and reprehensible as a crime against a state. The international area must be civilized."

That is the vigorous statement made by Dr. James A. Macdonald, of Toronto, Canada, editor of The Globe, director of the World Peace Foundation established by Edward Ginn, of Boston, and it was uttered during a discussion of the proposed arbitration treaty between the United States, Great Britain and France. Dr. Macdonald thinks the submission of the treaty particularly timely, since this month marks the 100th anniversary of the outbreak of the war of 1812. Two years hence the centennial of peace between the two countries will be celebrated.

"Do you think so long a period of international amity would have been possible?" continued Dr. Macdonald, "had the 4,000 miles of Canadian frontier bristled with fortifications and the Great Lakes been patrolled with battleships of the two nations?"

The burden of armaments caused by the old uncivilized method of settling differences between nations, has become simply intolerable. The waste of revenue is one of the greatest obstacles in the way of large social reforms. There is necessarily a limitation in the amount of money that can be applied to internal improvements when a nation like Great Britain spends $300,000,000 a year on her war budget.

The war against ignorance and crime, and to advance the cause of civilization, and enlightenment and human welfare, requires as much courage and self-sacrifice as are needed on the battlefield. Canada cannot afford the cost of war, and it means so much the money cost as the cost in men. We need all the brain power, courage and patriotism of our people for the fields and shops and to carry on the work of government.

The same qualities of unselfishness and sacrifice that are drawn out in the interest of the people are needed in the fight against the foes of honest commercial and industrial life, the organized and unorganized greed. The very term 'captain of industry' is taken from the military world, and perhaps unconsciously reveals the belief that many of our greatest corporations are organized in the same manner as an army. What is the interest of the people and to prevail at the expense of our public welfare.

"One of the things that has haunted me, especially since I was in England last, is the reaction of war on the life of the people. What was true of Rome under the Caesars and of France following the Napoleonic wars is true today. The standard of the manhood has suffered. In Scotland I found it had been necessary to lower the physical requirements three times within the last century to secure men to complete the regiment."

"In the war of evolution—the survival of the fittest—the war of the fittest who are sacrificed and who do not survive. The unjust laws of the world are the cause of the most ambitious sons over the seas and formed one of the big factors in the ruin of the civilization of the country. A more important factor, however, was the loss of capitalistic men along in the field of battle."

Model Farms For North.

The stage which left Edmonton for Athabasca Landing on a recent day, was among its passengers Messrs. G. Card and A. J. Bell, formerly of Guelph and Prince Albert, respectively, who will plant and maintain for years to come along the lonely shores of the Mackenzie River the most noteworthy demonstration farms in the Dominion.

Mr. Bell will be stationed at Fort Smith, which is on the line of the northern boundary of the Province of Alberta, while Mr. Card's lot will be east in Fort Simpson, on the Mackenzie, at one time the headquarters of the Hudson Bay Co. for the whole north country.

These points were chosen as the best adapted for the location of farms for the demonstration of the agricultural possibilities of Canada's hinterland, and at the same time to hold up to the northern Indians the manner of life lived by men in civilized communities. The demonstration farms are to be more or less under the Department of Indian Affairs.

A PEACE PREACHER.

Mrs. Elmer Black, Who Has Gone Abroad to Spread the New Gospel.

MRS. ELMER BLACK.

Mrs. Elmer Black is one of the persons who do not agree with ex-President Roosevelt in his opinion of the impossibility of settling international disputes by arbitration. Mrs. Black is an apostle of peace. She talks and writes peace. One of the most interesting addresses made at the recent peace conference in Baltimore was hers. Mrs. Black is vice president of the congress. She is also editor and publisher of the Editorial Review, a magazine that advocates universal peace.

In regard to her peace views, Mrs. Black says:

"I would not have much faith in arbitration treaties or even happy reports if evaluation and stopped with nationalities. I partitioned my duty from a devotion to the state to a blind devotion to one's country! But because I see everywhere this new habit of thinking in world terms, this growing sense of all humanity, this deepening sense of brotherhood and a kinship of soul stronger than mere national distinctions—because of this I believe that the promise of world peace and the edge of law is both feasible and certain of fulfillment."

Mrs. Black is now abroad, where she is to address many cordate gatherings in favor of universal peace.

QUAKER FRILL.

The Combination of Strange Fashion Notes a Feature of the Season.

The success of "The Quaker Maid," a new comic opera. In London, has started many Quaker fashions. One of these is the pointed neck frill, which is fastened in front with a ribbon rosette, small bow or fancy pin. This frill is laid in corded plaits. The wide band of ribbon about the head, giving a turban-like appearance to the coiffure, is one of the developments of the harem fashions. Thus one may see the most remarkable combinations of costume periods, as in this case the Quaker and Turkish notes. It may well be seen that the fashion designers have a wide catholicity of taste.

Space will not allow us to give a full report of the Liberal meetings held at Tan-y-Bryn and O'Neil's School on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, suffice it to say that each were well attended and the speaking was very good.

What would happen to your wife and family if you were to be taken away tomorrow? Prepare for the unexpected and have your life insured in the Manufacturers Life Insurance Co., J. S. Martin, sole agent for Crossfield and District.

As soon as the crops are harvested in the states there will be a lot of buyers who will come to Alberta to buy land. J. S. Martin is a to make a lot of sales. Have you not your place listed with him?

Don't let reciprocity interfere with your men's.

No reports of damage to grain by the frost of last night have reached us yet.

The Hon. C. W. Fisher, Mr. L. S. G.
Van Wart, and James Andison are in town today.

Every one should have their buildings insured against fire. See J. S.
Martin, he is the agent for Fire Insurance.

Miss E. Panabaker, who has been visiting her cousins Mr. and Miss Fisher, left for her home in Ontario yesterday.

A Conservative meeting was held at Beaver Dam School on Monday evening, and a very successful meeting is reported.

The date for the big Liberal meeting in Crossfield has not yet been set as we go to press, but will be held some time next week.
